选题(1)

The number of people participating in challenging or risky activities is increasing. Is risk-taking behavior something we are born with, or does it depend on the way we are brought up? What do you think about risk takers? Whether or not do you consider yourself a risk taker? Whether or not does taking risks in general is a good idea? Write your reaction to the questions. You should write in about 200—220 words to state your opinion.

选题(2)

The word pandemic carries with it all of the emotions of fear and worry over events that we may feel powerless to stop. Although we have treatments to use today that we didn't have in the past, we may still be unable to stop a disease that spreads so quickly that the rate of infection frightens us. How can we best protect ourselves against an infectious disease? Whether or not is it better to introduce quarantines and prohibit travel in the face of a new disease that could become a pandemic? Write your reaction to the questions. You should write in about 200—220 words to state your opinion.

选题(3)

More than 83,000 people are on the national waiting list for organs, including more than 2,000 younger than eighteen. Each day an average of 106 people are added to the nation's organ transplant waiting list; 68 receive transplants from living or dead donors, and 17 die waiting for a suitable organ. Would you agree to be an organ donor? What kind of transplants do you think will be possible in the future? Should governments set rules and regulations about organ donations? You should write in about 200—220 words to state your opinion.
